Johanna Spinks

Award-winning Los Angeles portrait artist Johanna Spinks knows faces inside out. For years she worked as a top Hollywood makeup artist to the stars applying her artistry to many famous faces before they went under the lights.

Over the years she became increasingly frustrated by the demands of the business and decided to devote herself full-time to her love of classical portraiture - still painting the face, but from now on exclusively in oil on canvas.

"Years of applying makeup to all types of faces (from astronaut moon-walker Buzz Aldrin, to actresses Jean Stapelton, All In The Family, and Tori Spelling, Beverly Hills 90210) under every conceivable lighting condition have given me a solid grasp of the facial form," says Johanna.

"I have always loved and studied every aspect of art but portraiture was a natural draw for me. There was just nothing else I wanted to paint. I am fascinated by faces and I study them all day long even when I'm not actually painting them, at the local coffee shop, at the drycleaners, at a L. A. Lakers Game, wherever... but painting a portrait is so much more than capturing a likeness. It is about a very delicate and sympathetic rendering of that person's essence and spirit for posterity and for future generations to see.

"And for me, that is where the real thrill and challenge comes in artistically. No one wants to see a dull soulless portrait however well it is painted. There are plenty of those on museum walls already. That special spark which brings tears to the client's eyes on delivery has to be there or you haven't done your job as a portrait artist. I want people to say 'Wow, you really captured the person... and it's also a great painting. Then I know it is a job well done.' "

Johanna steadfastly observes from her Malibu studio the grand tradition of oil portraiture after studying in museums around the world the works of the Old Masters from Frans Hal and Velasquez to John Singer Sargent and Lord Frederick Leighton.

She is particularly grateful for the inspiration and teachings of modern day master Mr. Everett Raymond Kinstler N.A. (painter of five U.S. presidents and over 50 cabinet members) with whom she has studied at The New York Art Students' League and The National Academy of Design.

Her classical oil portraits and paintings hang in both public and private collections in the United States, Canada, England and Australia.

Johanna Spinks will demonstrate portrait painting at our October 4th meeting.

The President's Message

October 2011

Recycling For Art's Sake

When you're outside painting and the wind blows, your body reacts. It shows up in your art. When the sun hits you or the rain pours you react to it. You don't have to think, it just shows up in the paint, interpreted as part of the scene. Your reactions become feelings and have an effect as part of the creation. This is not the art of copying it's the art of creation.

When I paint a new scene in my art journal, I distinguish particular details over others. I make choices with color, shape & value. Flipping through the pages, these distinctions become clear. As the viewer you'll see features that combine my chosen viewpoint, internal feelings and reactions to the environment. My journal tells more than where I've been, it's a living document made of recycled paper, color and emotion. Part of the fun is in writing along side the drawings and paintings.

My suggestion for creating unlimited art/poetry journals is to use the paper you're about to shred. Fold the writing inward, tape the right edge to make a pocket for found treasures, leaves and feathers. Punch two holes on the left side, stacking 10 to 20 sheets between covers made of recycled cardboard from a cereal box or a TV dinner carton. Bind them all together with 3' of yarn threaded through the holes and wound around a twig 1/4" thick and tied in a knot. Decorate or paint the cover as you wish then write and draw til your hearts content. You'll have a never ending supply of books because there is a never ending supply of items ready for recycling. Fill your books with the boundless ideas, observations and visions running around your head. Come to think of it: Our creations are a combination of experiences...recycled into our artwork!

Who's Who in the San Fernando Valley Art Club

Meet Pearl Schwager

“My dream for many years was to go to Paris.” Pearl and I are sitting at her kitchen table in her charming home and we are talking about, you guessed it, Art.

“I even took French language lessons with the thought that I could become a secretary to support myself while living in Paris.” Pearl laughs now but there was a time when she saw that as a viable plan.

As a young school girl, Pearl did murals and some drawing but her very first painting was done on her honeymoon with her husband, Jerry in 1957. That small, lovely painting hangs in her kitchen to this day. She originally started working with water based oils and some pastels. Pearl’s favorite subjects are water scenes and seascapes which she now paints mostly in acrylics but she really enjoys using pastels for her portraits.

Pearl’s paintings grace the walls of every room in her house and those that were not sold or given as gifts, are stacked on the floor in closets, against walls and almost every available space; a testament to her love of art.

Pearl speaks of her relationship with the SFVAC which began in 1995 when she first became a member. “I really enjoy the monthly meetings and the guest artist who presents a demonstration because it inspires me to try new techniques. Being with other artists, sharing ideas and thoughts makes me feel connected.”

Pearl’s favorite style of art is impressionism because, she tells us, “They painted from feelings and I love their exciting use of vibrant color.” While she could not single out as her favorite, any one of the famous painters of the past, she did speak of her admiration for some of the members in our club, especially Yona Rapoport for her portrait paintings. Family life is the most important thing in life for Pearl and much of her spare time is spent with her grand children, Emma, who is eight years old and Grace who is eleven, both the children of her daughter Tina and her partner Michele. The two girls, who are dancers, were in a recital the day before this interview and Pearl spoke glowingly about their performance.

Family gatherings on holidays are always a big affair with all the grand children, Emma, and Grace, Tina’s children and her son Charles’ children Rachel, and Daniel. Pearl really enjoyed the preparation for these events in the past, but it is her daughter in law, Nancy, the wife of her son Charles, who now does the Passover dinner.

Another one of Pearl’s passions is the LA Dodgers baseball team. She and Jerry are, after all, former Brooklyn residents and they carried their loyalty along with the famous team to LA. Her grandson, Daniel, was born in 1988 the year that the Brooklyn Dodgers won the World Series and at his Bar Mitzvah some years later, the theme of the party was sports and there was a special table for Pearl and Jerry dedicated to the Dodgers and Kurt Gibson. Pearl recalls the story about nearly being ejected from Dodger Stadium for always ringing a cow bell at the games. Somehow it is difficult to picture the woman we all know, who sweetly collects the donations for our monthly raffle, actually being removed from a baseball stadium for being too rowdy.

There are so many facets of Pearl, the gracious member we know as a prolific artist and willing volunteer, but some of the things we are just finding out are her love of French movies, her favorite of all time being the film, Diabolique, her love of reading, her most recent book being Jodi Picoult’s, “Sing You Home,” and her love of chopped liver and onions. You thought I was going to say chocolate didn’t you? Chocolate ice cream is her second favorite food.

We at SFVAC cannot thank you enough Pearl for your willingness to help, your cheerful personality and we are so grateful to count you among our most loyal members.
